Executive Brief on County Self-Association for Regional Emergency Planning Committees

Background:

The Emergency Planning and Community Right-to-Know Act (EPCRA) is a federal law enacted to ensure local communities are prepared to respond to chemical emergencies. EPCRA establishes a framework for emergency planning at the local level, requiring that communities are informed about hazardous chemicals stored and used within their jurisdiction. This law mandates the formation of Local Emergency Planning Committees (LEPCs) to develop and implement emergency response plans tailored to local needs and risks.

LEPCs, composed of local officials, emergency responders, public health professionals, industry representatives, and community members, are responsible for creating and updating emergency plans that address potential chemical hazards.

Option for Regional Emergency Planning Committees (REPCs):

Under EPCRA Sections 301(b) and 301(d), New Mexico counties have the option to form voluntary Regional Emergency Planning Committees (REPCs) by partnering with neighboring counties. This option allows for collaborative planning, resource sharing, and collective emergency preparedness.

Legal Framework:

EPCRA Section 301(b) requires State Emergency Response Commissions (SERCs) to designate emergency planning districts to facilitate local emergency planning. The SERC can designate multijurisdictional regions, enabling counties to self-associate for shared planning under a regional model. Section 301(d) further permits the SERC to revise these designations, providing counties the option to petition the SERC for adjustments in LEPC structure as deemed necessary.

Key Benefits of Forming an REPC:

1. Resource Sharing: Pooling resources allows for greater access to expertise, and personnel, strengthening local response capabilities.
2. Operational Efficiency: Joint planning minimizes redundant efforts, streamlining EPCRA compliance and creating a unified response strategy.
3. Enhanced Coordination: A regional structure builds stronger ties between counties, improving communication and collaboration during emergencies.

How to Establish an REPC:

Counties interested in forming an REPC can collaborate with neighboring jurisdictions and notify the SERC in writing of their interest in establishing a region planning district.
